- b. any question of international law;
- c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

Article 37

An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.

3. Trusteeship Council

The United Nations Trusteeship Council, one of the principal organs of the United Nations, was established to help and ensure that trust territories were administered in the best interests of their inhabitants and of international peace and security. The trust territories, most of them former mandates of the League of Nations or territories taken from nations defeated at the end of World War II—have all now attained self-government or independence, either as separate nations or by joining neighbouring independent countries.

The last was Palau, formerly part of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, which became a member state of the United Nations in December 1994. Under the Charter, the Trusteeship Council was to consist of an equal number of United Nations Member States administering trust territories and non-administering states. Thus, the Council was to consist of;

1. All U.N. members administering trust territories,
2. The five permanent members of the Security Council, and
3. As many other non-administering members as needed to equalize the number of administering and non-administering members, elected by the United Nations General Assembly for renewable three-year terms. Over time, as trust territories attained independence, the size and workload of the Trusteeship Council was reduced and ultimately came to include only

The five permanent Security Council members

- China,
- France,
- the Soviet Union/Russian Federation,
- the United Kingdom, and
- the United States

The Trusteeship Council was not assigned responsibility for colonial territories outside the trusteeship system, although the Charter did establish the principle that member states were to administer such territories in conformity with the best interests of their inhabitants.
